

MEMBER BULLETIN

December 8, 2020

New Online Services for WSIB Reporting

Uploading exposure incident and injury reports

The WSIB has introduced a new way to report injuries, illnesses and exposures online. Through this service, people with injuries and exposures, businesses and representatives can:

- upload workplace exposure incident reports,
- upload workplace injury or illness reports when a claim number does not already exist, and
- add supporting documents when submitting their report.

If a claim number already exists, people should upload their report using our claim document upload or report through their online services for businesses account.

Reporting noise-induced hearing loss

The WSIB has also introduced a new way for making a claim for work-related, noise-induced hearing loss, via a new online form. Providing an easy online option to make a noise-induced hearing loss claim allows us to gather all the information we need in one form, simplifying and speeding up the process for everyone.

Navigating to the right online service

To make it easier for people to navigate to the right online service to report an injury, illness, or exposure incident, they can answer a few questions and get directed to the right online service. People with injuries and exposures, businesses, health care professionals and representatives can use this feature.

Online services for people with claims update

In late January, people with claims can start adding direct deposit information to their online services accounts, making it easier and quicker to get benefit payments sent right to their bank accounts.

More people than ever are using the WSIB's online services for people with claims; over 12,000 people have signed up since June. Thank you for helping us promote these services.

For more information about our online services, please visit wsib.ca/onlineservices.